History of Canada, Vermont

Canada, Vermont, has a long and rich history. When it was established as Cooperstown in 1792, the town was only home to about a hundred people. The town slowly grew over the next few years, then, in 1812, the United States went to war with the British.

Many of Cooperstown's inhabitants had family in British Canada, and shortly into the war the town's name was changed to Canada to show their solidarity with them. In the winter of 1813, the leaders of the town gathered together to declare the town's secession from the Union to join the British side of the war. It was quickly brought back into the Union but the town never reverted to its previous name.

Canada's expansion continued throughout the 1800s, even more so after the recognition it garnered with brief rebellions. In 1874 the town hall that now stands proudly at the center of town was constructed. In 1907, the Olivier Memorial Library was dedicated to the recently deceased poet Joseph Olivier (1826-1905), who had been born and raised in Canada.

In its quiet corner of Vermont, Canada was less affected by the turbulent twentieth centuries than other parts of the world, but a memorial to the Canadian soldiers who fought in both World Wars stands in Webber Park in Old Cooperston. The town reached its peak population of about five thousand in the 1930s and has since roughly the same.

In recent years, the town of Canada has become a bit of a tourist town. In 1992 it celebrated its 200th anniversary, bringing thousands to the town to help with the festivities. Now the mellow little village awaits visitors to come enjoy it and find out why small Canada, Vermont takes up such a big place in so many people's hearts.
About Discover Canada, Vermont

The goal of Discover Canada, Vermont, Inc., is to attract more visitors to the town. We believe that Canada really is a beautiful place that doesn’t get nearly as much attention as it deserves. We aren’t affiliated with any of the individual businesses or the government of Canada, we are simply an independent organization trying to bring wealth and prosperity to the town.

Discover Canada, Vermont, Inc. was founded in 2005 by CEO Evan Dubois. Our founder’s vision was make his home town even greater than it already was. Help us along our journey make Canada even better, all you have to do is come visit Canada! Stay at a local hotel, buy from a shop, eat at a restaurant, go to the museum, every bit counts! Help us bring Canada to the forefront of tourist destinations!
